

The summer is rather a bad season for visits to Russia because of school and University vacations and the closing of indoor clubs and of all the theatres. But these disadvantages were partly compensated for by the All-Russian Peasant Fair at Nijni-Novgorod in August. This Fair was established no less than 400 years ago and has been instrumental in developing commerce between Europe and Asia. This international character is still visible in the presence of Persians with their carpets and dry-fruits, Chinese exhibiting their crafts, Usbeck tribesmen and Ukrainian damsels making with their variegated costumes, a beautiful picture. There were 500 Oriental firms, but none from Western Europe. Whilst Asiatic traders are welcomed, the European businessmen can deal only with the Commissioner on Foreign Trade. The mass of other soldiers are peasants and artisans. The majority of the public is made up of peasants, their Co-operative Societies and State Trading ~~extra~~ stores.

/the /almost
The head of the Fair, Maleecher, was one of the most charming men I have met, resembling no one so much as M. Albert Thomas of International Labour Office at Geneva. He struck us as being a man of outstanding ability and culture, and yet, till the revolution he had been an ordinary worker in a Leningrad factory. Now he is President of the Moscow markets and organises the Nijni-Novgorod Fair as well. It's true that the revolution has cost Russia valuable services of many members of the intelligentsia, but she is drawing upon the latest talent - so long wasted and ignored - from among the masses of the people at a rate which will fill the breach within ~~the~~ / next generation.

Is The Broker A Parasite ?

Our visit to the "Bourse" gave us a ~~shock~~ shock. One of the items in the Communist programme is, of course, the elimination of "parasitic middlemen." But here, going round amongst the traders, were twelve brokers, whose business was to bring together buyers and sellers thus promoting trade. Officials of various town-markets when fixed salaries of about Rs. 300 a month are here paid "bonus" proportionate to the number and value of transactions promoted - thus making during the Fair between Rs. 700/- and Rs. 1,300 each. This great breach in Communist theory was described to us as a necessary evil which was being gradually removed, there being twelve brokers this year against thirty in the last year.

Kiev.

Of all the memories of Russia, those of Kiev are the pleasantest and the most inspiring. This old capital of the Ukraine, is the prettiest town I have ever seen. At night, it is difficult to tear one's self away from the view of the moonlit city from St. Vladimir's hill. Kiev has a very much more prosperous appearance and is cleaner and more Western in its character and its people than Russia proper. Nowhere did we find more enthusiasm for the "regime" or greater revolutionary zeal than in this city with 13,000 Trade Unionists out of a total population of 180,000.

As giving the idea of the spread of "the newspaper habit", I must mention an incident in Kiev. In the outlying parts of the town, I noticed that little children at street corners cheered ~~xx~~ as our cars passed by. I casually remarked to one of our guides ~~with~~^{that} motor cars seemed quite lovely to children, to judge from their shouting. "No," he said, "They are cheering ~~in~~ your Party." I frankly refused to believe in this explanation, but another group of urchins cheered, and sure enough came the words: "Angli~~ski~~ delegatsi!" I apologise to my guide, and asked him how they could have known about our presence in the city. "From their newspapers of course," he said. "The Young Communists of Kiev have a morning daily of their own, and it is the duty of the Young Communists to transmit the news to their younger brothers and sisters every morning."

We visited many institutions in Kiev which only conformed our conviction that the most valuable work of the Soviets, so far as it touched the actual workers today, was the social, recreative and health work.

T.B. Sanatoria.

We visited T.B. Sanatoria. There are 5 such in the Ukraine for adults, each with about 150 beds, but 150 sanatorias of ~~xx~~ the same size for children. One of the sanatoria~~w~~ we visited had this year a grant of ~~1,000~~, 400,000 roubles (Rs.5,200,000) each inmate costing Rs.5/- a day for food alone. From that, one can judge of the high quality of the treatment the inmates were received. There was, of course, no rent to pay for the big estate and fine mansion which was acquired without "compensation" from its owner at the time of the revolution. Again and again, at different institutions, we were asked: "How could we have established and run these life-giving houses if we had gone round paying huge sums as compensation to land-lords as your Ramsay MacDonald proposes to do?"

Interest In India.

An hour's visit to the Young Workers' Rest Home near Kiev, gave us a glimpse ~~of~~ at Young Russia in a mass. They were the most enthusiastic crowd of young people imaginable. When at the gate we were introduced, the bare mention of my race led to spontaneous rush at me, and before I knew where I was, I found myself being carried shoulder high to the building, and I was not deposited on safe soil until I had been tossed high~~t~~ up in the air 4 or 5 times, that being the most cordial greeting the Russians can give. Having seen rest-houses before, we decided to spend our all too brag hour in exchanging views and information. Interest in India being very great, the crowd round me was by far the biggest. Most of the questions put to me, were about conditions ~~they~~ of the Indian workers. I gave them figures of wages in India and working hours "But if they are so badly exploited, why don't they have a revolution like ours?" I made excuses: "The country is very big, most of the workers are peasants! - "But that only resembles Russia!" - "The workers are illiterate and unorganised. There is no Lenin to lead them." - "What then are you educated young men doing?" Then followed the searching question. Was I a member of the Communist Party? No! Why not? I explained that I belonged to the Labour Party. Straight came the retort: "Yes, but the Labour Party was led by renegades like MacDonald, Thomas and Snowden!" It was impossible to make them understand that the mass of good & Socialists in England still belonged to the Labour Party. Had they heard of Maxton and Lansbury? - Yes, they were honest people, but fools! Did they imagine their English masters were going to let them free without a fight? - Saklatvala? Oh yes, they knew him, he was a good fighter. - and Cook, he was the only decent T.U. leader left in England! Yes, they could trust Cook all right - I saw my chance. Cook was not a member of the Communist Party, I argued. If Cook could belong to a Labour Party, so could I. - "Yes, perhaps so, but still" it ~~seemed~~ somehow did not fit in with their Party ethics!

In Soviet Russia
Nijni-Novgorod & Kiev

IV

The summer is rather a bad season for visits to Russia because of school and University vacations and the closing of indoor clubs and of all the theatres. But these disadvantages were partly compensated for by the All-Russian Peasant Fair at Nijni-Novgorod in August. This Fair was established no less than 400 years ago and has been instrumental in developing commerce between Europe and Asia. This international character is still visible in the presence of Persians with their carpets and dry-fruits, Chinese exhibiting their crafts, Usbeck tribesmen and Ukrainian damsels making with their variegated costumes a beautiful picture. There were 500 Oriental firms, but none from Western Europe. Whilst Asiatic traders are welcomed, the European businessmen can deal only with the Commissioner on Foreign Trade. The mass of other soldiers are peasants and artisans. The majority of the public is made up of peasants their Co-operative Societies and State Trading stores.

The head of the Fair, Maleecher, was one of the most charming men I have met, resembling no one so much as M. Albert Thomas of International Labour Office at Geneva. He struck us as being a man of outstanding ability and culture, and yet, till the revolution he had been an ordinary worker in a Leningrad factory. Now he is President of the Moscow markets and organises the Nijni-Novgorod Fair as well. It's true that the revolution has cost Russia valuable services of many members of the intelligentsia, but she is drawing upon the latest talent - so long wasted and ignored - from among the masses of the people at a rate which will fill the breach within most generation.

Is The Broker A Parasite ?

Our visit to the "Bourse" gave us a ~~shock~~ shock. One of the items in the Communist programme is, of course, the elimination of "parasitic middlemen." But here, going round amongst the traders, were twelve brokers, whose business was to bring together buyers and sellers thus promoting trade. Officials of various town-markets when fixed salaries of about Rs. 300 a month are here paid "bonus" proportionate to the number and value of transactions promoted - thus making during the Fair between Rs. 700/- and Rs. 1,300/- each. This great breach in Communist theory was described to us as a necessary evil which was being gradually removed, there being twelve brokers this year against thirty in the last year.

Kiev.

Of all the memories of Russia, those of Kiev are the pleasantest and the most inspiring. This old capital of the Ukraine, is the prettiest town I have ever seen. At night, it is difficult to tear one's self away from the view of the moonlit city from St. Vladimir's hill. Kiev has a very much more prosperous appearance and is cleaner and more Western in its character and its people than Russia proper. Nowhere did we find more enthusiasm for the "regime" or greater revolutionary zeal than in this city with 13,000 Trade Unionists out of a total population of 180,000.

As giving the idea of the spread of "the newspaper habit", I must mention an incident in Kiev. In the outlying parts of the town, I noticed that little children at street corners cheered ~~us~~ as our cars passed by. I casually remarked to one of our guides ^{that} ~~the~~ motor cars seemed quite lovely to children, to judge from their shouting. "No," he said, "They are cheering ~~in~~ your Party." I frankly refused to believe in this explanation, but another group of urchins cheered, and sure enough came the words: "Anglioki delegatsii!" I apologise to my guide, and asked him how they could have known about our presence in the city. "From their newspapers of course," he said. "The Young Communists of Kiev have a morning daily of their own, and it is the duty of the Young Communists to transmit the news to their younger brothers and sisters every morning."

We visited many institutions in Kiev which only confirmed our conviction that the most valuable work of the Soviets, so far as it touched the actual workers today, was the social, recreative and health work.

T.B. Sanatoria.

We visited T.B. Sanatoria. There are 5 such in the Ukraine for adults, each with about 150 beds, but 150 sanatoria of ~~the~~ the same size for children. One of the sanatoria we visited had this year a grant of ~~1,000,000~~ 400,000 roubles (Rs. 5,200,000) each inmate costing Rs. 5/- a day for food alone. From that, one can judge of the high quality of the treatment the inmates were received. There was, of course, no rent to pay for the big estate and fine mansion which was acquired without "compensation" from its owner at the time of the revolution. Again and again, at different institutions, we were asked: "How could we have established and run these life-giving houses if we had gone round paying huge sums as compensation to land-lords as your Ramsay MacDonald proposes to do?"

Interest In India.

An hour's visit to the Young Workers' Rest Home near Kiev, gave us a glimpse of at Young Russia in a mass. They were the most enthusiastic crowd of young people imaginable. When at the gate we were introduced, the bare mention of my race led to spontaneous rush at me, and before I knew where I was, I found myself being carried shoulder high to the building, and I was not deposited on safe soil until I had been tossed high up in the air 4 or 5 times, that being the most cordial greeting the Russians can give. Having seen rest-houses before, we decided to spend our all too brief hour in exchanging views and information. Interest in India being very great, the crowd round me was by far the biggest. Most of the questions put to me, were about conditions ~~that~~ of the Indian workers. I gave them figures of wages in India and working hours "But if they are so badly exploited, why don't they have a revolution like ours?" I made excuses: "The country is very big, most of the workers are peasants? - "But that only resembles Russia!" - "The workers are illiterate and unorganised. There is no Lenin to lead them." - "What then are you educated young men doing?" Then followed the searching question. Was I a member of the Communist Party? No! Why not? I explained that I belonged to the Labour Party. Straight came the retort: "Yes, but the Labour Party was led by renegades like MacDonald, Thomas and Snowden!" It was impossible to make them understand that the mass of good & Socialists in England still belonged to the Labour Party. Had they heard of Maxton and Lansbury? - Yes, they were honest people, but fools! Did they imagine their English masters were going to let them free without a fight? - Saklatvala? Oh yes, they knew him, he was a good fighter. - and Cook, he was the only decent T.U. leader left in England! Yes, they could trust Cook all right - I saw my chance. Cook was not a member of the Communist Party, I argued. If Cook could belong to a Labour Party, so could I. - "Yes, perhaps so, but still" it ~~seems~~ somehow did not fit in with their Party ethics!

In Soviet Russia
Nijni-Novgorod & Kiev

IV

The summer is rather a bad season for visits to Russia because of school and University vacations and the closing of indoor clubs and of all the theatres. But these disadvantages were partly compensated for by the All-Russian Peasant Fair at Nijni-Novgorod in August. This Fair was established no less than 400 years ago and has been instrumental in developing commerce between Europe and Asia. This international character is still visible in the presence of Persians with their carpets and dry-fruits, Chinese exhibiting their crafts, Usbeck tribesmen and Ukrainian dancers making with their variegated costumes, a beautiful picture. There were 500 Oriental firms, but none from Western Europe. Whilst Asiatic traders are welcomed, the European businessmen can deal only with the Commissioner on Foreign Trade. The mass of other soldiers are peasants and artisans. The majority of the public is made up of peasants their Co-operative Societies and State Trading stores.

The head of the Fair, Maleecher, was one of the most charming men I have met, resembling no one so much as M. Albert Thomas of International Labour Office at Geneva. He struck us as being a man of outstanding ability and culture, and yet, till the revolution he had been an ordinary worker in a Leningrad factory. Now he is President of the Moscow markets and organises the Nijni-Novgorod Fair as well! It's true that the revolution has cost Russia valuable services of many members of the intelligentsia, but she is drawing upon the latest talent - so long wasted and ignored - from among the masses of the people at a rate which will fill the breach within most generation.

Is The Broker A Parasite?

Our visit to the "Bourse" gave us a shock. One of the items in the Communist programme is, of course, the elimination of "parasitic middlemen." But here, going round amongst the traders, were twelve brokers, whose business was to bring together buyers and sellers thus promoting trade. Officials of various town-markets when fixed salaries of about Rs.300 a month are here paid "bonus" proportionate to the number and value of transactions promoted - thus making during the Fair between Rs.700/- and Rs.1,300 each. This great breach in Communist theory was described to us as a necessary evil which was being gradually removed, there being twelve brokers this year against thirty in the last year.

Kiev.

Of all the memories of Russia, those of Kiev are the pleasantest and the most inspiring. This old capital of the Ukraine, is the prettiest town I have ever seen. At night, it is difficult to tear one's self away from the view of the moonlit city from St. Vladimir's hill. Kiev has a very much more prosperous appearance and is cleaner and more Western in its character and its people than Russia proper. Nowhere did we find more enthusiasm for the "regime" or greater revolutionary zeal than in this city with 13,000 Trade Unionists out of a total population of 180,000.

As giving the idea of the spread of "the newspaper habit", I must mention an incident in Kiev. In the outlying parts of the town, I noticed that little children at street corners cheered ~~xx~~ as our cars passed by. I casually remarked to one of our guides ^{that} ~~the~~ motor cars seemed quite lovely to children, to judge from their shouting. "No," he said, "They are cheering ~~xx~~ your Party." I frankly refused to believe in this explanation, but another group of urchins cheered, and sure enough came the words: "Anglicki delegatsii!" I apologise to my guide, and asked him how they could have known about our presence in the city. "From their newspapers of course," he said. "The Young Communists of Kiev have a morning daily of their own, and it is the duty of the Young Communists to transmit the news to their younger brothers and sisters every morning."

We visited many institutions in Kiev which only confirmed our conviction that the most valuable work of the Soviets, so far as it touched the actual workers today, was the social, recreative and health work.

T.B. Sanatoria.

We visited T.B. Sanatoria. There are 5 such in the Ukraine for adults, each with about 150 beds, but 150 sanatorias of ~~xx~~ the same size for children. One of the sanatorias we visited had this year a grant of ~~1992~~ 400,000 roubles (Rs.5,200,000) each inmate costing Rs.5/- a day for food alone. From that, one can judge of the high quality of the treatment the inmates were received. There was, of course, no rent to pay for the big estate and fine mansion which was acquired without "compensation" from its owner at the time of the revolution. Again and again, at different institutions, we were asked: "How could we have established and run these life-giving houses if we had gone round paying huge sums as compensation to land-lords as your Ramsay MacDonald proposes to do?"

Interest In India.

An hour's visit to the Young Workers' Rest Home near Kiev, gave us a glimpse ~~xx~~ at Young Russia in a mass. They were the most enthusiastic crowd of young people imaginable. When at the gate we were introduced, the bare mention of my race led to spontaneous rush at me, and before I knew where I was, I found myself being carried shoulder high to the building, and I was not deposited on safe soil until I had been tossed high up in the air 4 or 5 times, that being the most cordial greeting the Russians can give. Having seen rest-houses before, we decided to spend our all too brief hour in exchanging views and information. Interest in India being very great, the crowd round me was by far the biggest. Most of the questions put to me, were about conditions ~~they~~ of the Indian workers. I gave them figures of wages in India and working hours "But if they are so badly exploited, why don't they have a revolution like ours?" I made excuse: "The country is very big, most of the workers are peasants? - "But that only resembles Russia!" - "The workers are illiterate and unorganised. There is no Lenin to lead them." - "What then are you educated young men doing?" Then followed the searching question. Was I a member of the Communist Party? No! Why not? I explained that I belonged to the Labour Party. Straight came the retort: "Yes, but the Labour Party was led by renegades like MacDonald, Thomas and Snowden!" It was impossible to make them understand that the mass of good & Socialists in England still belonged to the Labour Party. Had they heard of Maxton and Lansbury? - Yes, they were honest people, but fools! Did they imagine their English masters were going to let them free without a fight? - Saklatvala? Oh yes, they knew him, he was a good fighter. - and Cook, he was the only decent T.U. leader left in England! Yes, they could trust Cook all right - I saw my chance. Cook was not a member of the Communist Party, I argued. If Cook could belong to a Labour Party, so could I. - "Yes, perhaps so, but still" it ~~seems~~ somehow did not fit in with their Party ethics!
